Evening at the Nellis Tavern

by Elizabeth A. Tomlin

A happy celebration took place on Sept. 24, during the 6th 'Evening at the Tavern', at Nellis Tavern, St. Johnsville, as the completion of stenciling in three rooms on the first floor was completed just in time for the event.

"Our stencil project took a long time to come to fruition," said Sandy Nellis Lane. "Although the main part of the building was built around 1747 as a farmhouse, the eastern two-story addition arrived after the War of 1812 and the opening of the Mohawk Turnpike."

Lane says that due to the large amount of people moving west, who needed a place to stay enroute, an expanded tavern was built. "Wallpaper was very expensive in 1816," Lane explained, "so an itinerant stenciler was hired to decorate the new plaster walls on the first and second floor of the addition. The large room on the first floor was then three rooms, so there are three sets of stencil arrangements to be seen now."

Lane remarked that several people had copied the original stencils, which had faded over the years and had been wallpapered over sometime around 1850. "I spent many hours recording what the original 14 stencils looked like and where they were placed."

Lane said that each of the three rooms is unique, with many floral and leaf-like designs in well-measured patterns.

Event organizer Ray Draus goes over paperwork with Sandy Nellis Lane at the event.

"We had new stencils made and hired Ken Forcier of Ranier, OR to paint them on for us, just as they had been."

Forcier, proprietor of Gracewood Design, is the son of Polly Forcier, a well-known researcher of Early American stencil design, who had accumulated a collection of over 450 authentic wall and floor stencils, circa 1740-1840.

Forcier, who attended the Evening at the Tavern event, said the Nellis Tavern stenciling took longer than he expected due to the complicated pattern and the fact that there were three rooms

Welcome to the CANAJOHARIE EAST HILL SCHOOL FAMILY October newsletter...

We have GREAT news for all of our families that attend East Hill School.

We are so excited to announce our new character education and positive social skills program!

25 Scholastic Way, Canajoharie, NY 13317 518-673-6310

WE ARE CREATING A SCHOOL FAMILY THROUGH THE USE OF CONSCIOUS DISCIPLINE!

What is Conscious Discipline? Conscious Discipline is an evidence-based, self-regulation program that integrates social-emotional learning and discipline. It is a way of organizing schools and classrooms around the concept of a school family. Each member of the school family, learns the skills needed to form healthy relationships, communicate effectively, is sensitive to other's needs, and gets along with others.

“What are the skills that are needed?”

The seven skills are composure, empathy, integrity, assertiveness, responsibility, the ability to make good choices, and the ability to see the best in others.

“How will the faculty and staff learn about this new approach?”

The staff at East Hill School will have the amazing opportunity to be trained by nationally certified Conscious Discipline trainers! The first training took place in October. The next training will take place in January. Child care will be provided by the school for any family that needs it!

“How can I learn more about Conscious Discipline and the school family approach?”

You can find a ton of great information at ConsciousDiscipline.com or you can call or stop by East Hill and speak to our School Family Facilitator or email her at michele.nare@canjo.org

 - 1/2 teaspoon salt
 - 3/4 cup butter or margarine
 - 1-1/4 cup sugar
 - 3 large eggs
 - 2 tablespoons amaretto (almond flavor liqueur)
 - 1-1/2 cup sliced almonds
1. Heat oven to 350 F. On waxed paper, combine flour, baking powder and salt.

2. In large microwave safe bowl, heat butter in microwave oven on high 1 minute or until butter melts, stirring once. With wire whisk, stir in sugar, eggs and amaretto until smooth. With spoon, stir flour mixture and almonds into egg mixture until dough forms.

3. Divide dough in half. On ungreased large cookie sheet, with floured hands, shape 1 piece dough into 14 by 4-inch log (dough will be sticky). Repeat with remaining dough on another cookie sheet.

4. Place cookie sheets on 2 oven racks. Bake logs 25 to 30 minutes or until golden and toothpick inserted in center comes out clean, rotating sheets between upper and lower racks halfway through baking. Cool logs on cookie sheets on wire racks 20 minutes. Reset oven to 325 F.

5. Transfer logs to cutting board. With serrated knife, cut each log crosswise into 1/2-inch thick diagonal slices. Place slices, cut side down, on same ungreased cookie sheets.

6. Bake slices 25 to 30 minutes or until golden on bottom, rotating sheets between racks halfway through baking. With spatula, transfer biscotti to wire racks to cool completely. Store biscotti in tightly covered container at room temperature up to 2 weeks, or in freezer up to 6 months.

Volleyball Players Experience College Ball:

The JV and Varsity volleyball teams recently attended a college volleyball match at Sage College, where two of our graduates faced each other in a non-league match. Emily Potter, a freshman at SUNY Cobleskill, played versus Desiree Suits, a freshman at Sage College. The two Fort Plain teams watched the match with great interest! Sage won in three games, but faced some good competition from Emily Potter, who played the entire match. Desiree added some fantastic digs and hits, as she battled back from a back injury. This opportunity allowed our players to see the college, experience college-level competition, and to realize that hard work does, indeed, pay off!

Heart of the house

by Terry Berkson

In 1932 my Uncle Harry graduated from New York's City College with a degree in aeronautical engineering. For more than a year he tried to get a job in that field but likely due to the Great Depression he was unsuccessful. So, he turned to the heating business where thousands of homes and industrial buildings were converting to oil to take the place of coal, which was messy and in most cases required a lot of physical labor. Maybe it was for practice or maybe he was just being a good son but one of his first installations was in my grandmother Fanny's drafty, 12-room "country" house in Brooklyn where he converted a coal burning steam boiler to an oil fired system.

Up until then, Mr. Lowman, a carpenter from Germany, who occupied a room he had built in the cellar, would take care of the heating system. My grandfather, Charles, had employed him to enclose the front porch, build a pantry in back of the house and a small barn, which would house a horse that would be used for Sunday buggy rides. But Charles died of pneumonia just before the work was completed on his recently purchased home. From then on hard times seemed to set in. Fanny began to rent out rooms but she could no longer afford to employ Mr. Lowman who stayed on anyway. On weekends he'd travel to Hoboken, NJ, to spend time with friends from the old country. When he'd return in a merry mood in the wee hours of the morning he'd shovel coal into the feeble fire then drop into bed and, dog tired, sing himself to sleep. Eventually, he found another paying position and moved on. Then Grandma was the one who often had to split wood and shovel coal into the boiler when none of her seven sons were available. So, Uncle Harry's gift of a conversion was a godsend—not that oil heat was able to warm the old Victorian comfortably—just keep it from freezing on bitter cold days while occupants hugged the banging, but soon to cool steam radiators. Like a failing heart the old boiler intermittently pumped steam through the house's circulatory system while burning two gallons of oil an hour.

Long before my grandmother passed away my father routinely took over care of the boiler which had once been Mr. Lowman's job. But Dad was more of a musician than a mechanic and did little to maintain and lessen the consumption of oil—except when he turned down the thermostat which made wearing a night cap when you went to sleep a good idea. Fortunately the inefficiency of the old boiler was buffered by the fact that Uncle Harry's Peerless Fuel Oil Company supplied oil to the house at a wholesale price.

Years later, and yet a long time ago, I took over the heating job after Dad was gone. Because I had worked for and learned from Uncle Harry, I made several improvements to the boiler that made it a lot more efficient. I lined the combustion chamber with new fire bricks, stripped the loose asbestos, mixed it with water and reapplied it. I eliminated a hot water storage tank and replaced it with an instantaneous coil. This reduced, by 30 gallons, the amount of water that had to be boiled to make steam. One might say I gave the boiler a bypass. Now, heat would be generated and circulate through the house in a fraction of the time it had taken before—using a lot less oil. Dad would have been delighted.

Fired up, the boiler built a head of steam as my grandmother in her double knit maroon wool sweater hugged a radiator, my dad grabbed his night cap and Mr. Lowman fed a shovel full of coal into a memory.

Drying apples

by Dr. Leonard Perry, Horticulture Professor Emeritus, University of Vermont

Visiting an orchard, either to buy pre-picked or pick-your-own apples, makes a great fall outing. Even if you can't visit an orchard, fresh local apples can be found in farmstands, farmers markets, and many grocers. Drying is an easy way to stock up on fresh apples, in several forms, to enjoy through the long winter months.

There are three main methods of drying. Solar drying is just that, using the heat from the sun. Unless you use the back window ledge of a closed car for 3 or 4 days, this likely won't dry fast enough in the fall. Oven drying works if your oven can be set below 200 degrees (F), preferably 130 to 150 degrees. If you plan to dry many fruits or vegetables in this and coming years, you may wish to invest in (or make) a dehydrator.

Start by choosing ripe fruit, then wash and cut off any blemishes. Don't oversoak as this will lead to some nutrient loss, and fruits will be water-soaked and take longer to dry. Peels may be left on, but they may become bitter or discolor upon drying. Then core, and cut the fruit as you wish into sections or slices.

Pre-drying treatments aren't necessary as they are for some vegetables, as fruits have higher levels of sugar and acid that prevent decomposition by enzymes. However, pretreating can prevent discoloring in some varieties of apples, and can lower losses of flavor and vitamins A and C. Just realize if you soak apples in a solution, plan on longer times for drying.

A common dip for apples is ascorbic (also known as citric) acid, which also increases the vitamin C content. You can find this commonly among canning supplies in stores. Follow directions for mixing with water, stir the fruit until evenly coated, then remove after about 5 minutes. If you don't find such a product, you can make your own dip by dissolving three crushed tablets (500-milligram) of vitamin C in a quart of water. Some use the juice from citrus fruits, but this is weaker and less effective.

Another dip that you can use, similar to that used in commercial products, is with sulfite compounds. Follow directions on products you find for sale for this purpose. Don't use if you or others who will consume the fruit, particularly those with asthma, are allergic to sulfites.

For sweet fruit, you may wish to pretreat with sugar syrup or honey. You can use up to one part sugar to two parts water, bringing this to a boil. Add the fruit, simmer for 5 minutes, then drain. A honey dip, in addition to sweetness, can lessen browning and softening. Use one part honey to four parts water, soak the fruit, then drain well. Obviously these apples will taste of honey.

Place apple slices or sections in a single layer on trays, and dry until leathery or crisp with no moist centers. Figure on 6 to 12 hours, but check periodically. Since some pieces may be drier than others, it is a good idea to "condition" fruits prior to storage. Fruits have higher moisture than vegetables when dry, so the need to condition them for best storage. This distributes moisture evenly among fruit, minimizing the chance for spoilage, and gives you a check to make sure they are sufficiently dry.

To condition apples, as with any fruits, loosely pack the cooled and dried fruit into plastic or glass containers, filling about two-thirds full. Cover containers tightly, and shake daily for about 2 to 4 days. This allows moisture from wetter pieces to be absorbed by drier ones. If water forms on the lid inside, the fruit aren't dry enough and should be placed back in the dehydrator. You can place dry and conditioned fruit in containers or freezer bags. Even if not freezing, the latter are more resistant to moisture than normal plastic bags. Store in dark, cool and dry, such as an unheated closet or garage, or even a refrigerator if space allows.

Another fun option for apples is to make fruit leathers—great for small quantities, bruised or overripe fruit, and popular with children. They can be made from cooked or uncooked fruit. Wash and prepare fruit as for drying, then if cooking use a double boiler or microwave until fruit are soft, stirring occasionally.

Once cooked, or if uncooked once cut into sections or slices, add one tablespoon of lemon or citrus juice per quart of fruit. Prepare a thick puree, as in a food processor or blender. You may add spices or sweeteners to taste. Pour the puree onto special trays for this, or else a lightly oiled piece of heavy plastic, spreading to about one-quarter inch thick. Make sure the tray isn't covered totally with the plastic so air can circulate.

Dry until the fruit leather is sticky, about 6 to 8 hours at 140 degrees (F). If properly dried it will peel away readily from the plastic. If too dry it will be brittle, but is still edible. Leave whole, or cut into slices or strips that can be rolled up. Store cool, dark, and dry in airtight containers as you would for dried fruit.

Paw's Corner: Airbnb rental comes with cat

Dear Paw's Corner: Last weekend we took a trip to the Northeast to leaf peep. We rented a private house through Airbnb, and it was a really nice place. It even came with a cat! While caring for the owners' cat wasn't a problem — they left food and water, and the cat did his business outside — it left me wondering. Would I be so comfortable leaving my pets with strangers for several days at a time? What do you think? — Sara in Boston

Dear Sara: I'm personally a little bit torn about this topic. While cats can generally do well on their own for a couple of days, I too wonder if I could leave a cat with strangers who are renting a property I own.

I expect that if both sides are clear about the arrangement — the rental comes with a cat, and there's an expectation to make sure food and water are available — then it's not a problem. But, what if the cat gets ill or injured? Are instructions available to the visitor such as the contact number of an emergency vet? And how much do I really know about the visitors, even those that have good reviews on a room rental website?

I'd love to hear from cat owners who rent out their homes or apartments for weekends or longer. Are your pets part of the deal? Do you worry about it? What if a visitor doesn't want to have a cat around? Email ask@pawscorner.com and let us know.

Country Preacher

by Pastor Dan West

We believers in Christ are the "Body of Christ" (I Corinthians 12:27). When Jesus went to sit at His Father's right hand in Heaven, He left His disciples to be His body — His feet, hands, eyes, mouth, etc. here on the earth. So each one of us has a function as part of His Body.

If your knee itches, doesn't another part of your body — say your hand — come to its rescue and scratch the itch? So it should be in the Body of Christ. When a part of the Body (another believer) needs help, shouldn't other parts of the Body (you and me) come to their rescue?

The Apostle Paul said in II Corinthians 1:4 The Lord Jesus Christ comforts us in all our tribulation that we may be able to comfort those who are in any trouble, with the comfort with which we ourselves are comforted by God.

Whatchamacallits

This week, our Whatchamacallit isn't really a true "whatcha" in the sense that most folks will recognize these items for what they are - bait tins and hooks. What makes some of these items special is where they were manufactured.

We'll start with the hook cards. The larger light colored one touts the name Joe Pepper's "Rome Special" Quality SNELLED HOOKS made in Rome, NY by the Joe E Pepper Bait Co. Their slogan says: Peppy-Brand Fishing Tackle. It is Hook number 21 and "every one guaranteed not to pull out".

The second hook is for 4 - 6 inch minnows and was manufactured by the U-Ketch-Em Co. in Union Springs, NY. "If he strikes he's yours. Don't feed 'em - catch 'em." This item was designed to hold the minnow (bait) at the mouth and near the tail to keep it secured to your line.

Next we have the bait tins. The small beat-up red one has a very faint embossed fish on the front, the oval one has no distinguishing markings, but the large green one has very nice graphics on the front and when I enlarged it, I was surprised to see it was made in Utica, NY.

Harrocks-Ibbotson Co. manufactured fishing tackle specializing in fly fishing rods with their factory located on lower Whitesboro Street. It was difficult to find any information on the bait tin itself, but I did find some information about the rods. By using the decal as a date-stamp, we can date this bait tin between 1934-39. Their slogan on the banner reads: Best by Test.

Fort Klock from 14

traveled as far away as Virginia to take part in re-enactments, representing the "Kings Royal Regiment of NY." Also traveling with their group of about 100 was Marti MacFarlane of Prescott, Ontario, Lauren MacNeil of Brampton, Ontario, and Sargent Shaun Finnegan who had won an award of "the Great Cup" for his performance as "an outstanding soldier."

Local re-enactor Sara Evenson says she has been volunteering at Fort Klock "since she was a kid," and all through high school and college. "I even went to grad school for history!"

"The weekend was a wonderful time — the beautiful weather and opportunity to be at such a historic site made it amazing," said Evensen. "It was delightful to see a variety of perspectives and interpretations of Mohawk Valley and Revolutionary War history presented. It was clear that everyone who attended felt very passionately about what they were doing!"

Although both Saturday and Sunday featured a re-enactment of a raid on the fort, daily life in the 18th-century was a huge component of the weekend.

"Our program was about more than battles," commented John Osinski. "It highlighted 18th-century activities such as cooking, baking, brewing, dyeing, etc. Canadian revolutionary war historian Gavan Watt spoke to an overflow crowd in the Dutch Barn on Saturday evening about 1781 raids into the Mohawk."

An "overflow crowd" also attended the "Great necessity calls out great virtue" program, which took place on Saturday afternoon.

Bernadette Weaver, Judy Leggett, Lisa Emden, Marti MacFarlane, Mary Alexander, Joanna Case and Diane Acevedo each related stories about women who had displayed tremendous courage and strength in the face of adversity, which included "Gertrude Zimmer Mat-tice from Middlefort in Schoharie county, killing Indians with her flat iron."

"We do have Loyalist and Patriot — or rebel, depending on your viewpoint — ladies seated at the same table quite peacefully," remarked Bernadette Weaver in her introduction to the story telling. "But this is not so unfathomable as one might think. In a time when your survival in harsh territories and unfavorable weather conditions depended upon your neighbors — who could be few and far between — politics took a back seat to basic human needs."

Programs and demonstrations provided an excellent opportunity for families and re-enactors to socialize and learn more about the history of the Mohawk Valley.

Nellis Tavern from 9

to cover. "It's a wonderful, happy pattern — and it came out perfectly!" he remarked.

Lane said the Tavern property was first owned by Christian Nellis, whose brother William is the ancestor of dairy farmer John Nellis. John and his wife Chris live on the original William Nellis property, which will be celebrating its 300th anniversary in 2023.

John and Chris attended the Evening at the Tavern for the first time this year.

"Our evening at the tavern was very enjoyable," commented Chris. "I am always impressed with the way the tavern takes on a new life. The interest and the hands that care for this historic building truly make it something to see. It was our first time at this event and we are sure to return, good food, neighbors, and sharing time in a place that our ancestors spent time adds to the foundation of our family."

John and Chris Nellis were first time attendees at the event this year.

Skip Barshied is waited on by Mary Nellis Davis, President of the Palatine Settlement Society, and BOD member Judi Mihal.
